Since 1969 over one thousand people have died in police custody in England. No police officer to date has ever been convicted for any of these deaths. The deaths continue and so does the cover-up. Injustice is the story of the struggles for justice by the families of some those killed by the police.

The meeting will then hear about the United Families and Friends Campaign and the continuing fight for justice of Sean Rigg's family from his sister Marcia, after an inquest jury last year found the police had "more than minimally" contributed to his death at Brixton police station in 2008. The family are fighting for all lessons to be learnt and effective action to be taken against police officers, some of whom are being investigated for lying on oath.

There is also currently a review into the Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC) investigation of Sean's death. The IPCC has been found "not fit for purpose".
